

Running an appraisal, screen by screen

Every step of the Performance module, in the order you actually do it, with a photograph of the screen you should be looking at. No code, no database, no jargon left unexplained.

WHO THIS IS FOR	Anyone walking the product — no engineering knowledge assumed
HOW TO READ IT	Every step says Where, Who, Click, and what you should see
A FULL WALK TAKES	About 40 minutes, switching between accounts

Screenshots taken from the running product on 11 September 2026. Every button label quoted here is the wording actually on screen.

Before you start

The five words the whole module is built from

Appraisal period	A stretch of time you are judging people over. Starting one hands every employee a form. A person's mark belongs to one period, never to "the year".
Objective (shown as "KPI")	What somebody is aiming at. A target, filed against a period. The screen says KPI; the rest of the product says objective. They are not two things.
Measure	The number under an objective — "offers accepted", starting at 2, aiming at 8. Progress is worked out from it.
Competency	How somebody works rather than what they delivered. Four groups come ready-made. Leadership is only rated for people who actually manage somebody — for everybody else it is left out, not marked low.
The mark	What it all adds up to. Each part carries a percentage and they total 100% exactly. The product refuses a set that does not.

The one rule that explains half the screens. An objective must be agreed before the period it covers, and only agreed objectives are ever scored. A target agreed after the result is known is not a target. That is why there is a whole queue screen for agreeing them, why an agreed objective freezes, and why reopening one demands a written reason.

Who is who in this document

The person	Any employee, looking at their own objectives and their own appraisal. No special access. This is what most of the company will ever see.
Line manager	Anybody who has people reporting to them. Not a job title you are given — it follows from who reports to whom. Whoever heads a department gets the same reach over everybody in it.
HR / Owner	Whoever runs the exercise. They set the scoring up, start the period, move it along and publish it. In a small company this is often one person.

If a menu item in this document is missing when you look for it, check which of the three you are signed in as. The product hides what you cannot act on rather than showing you a button that refuses.

The five stages a period moves through

	STAGE	HR / OWNER	THE MANAGER	THE PERSON
1	Not started	Names it, sets dates, writes questions, decides who it covers	—	Sees nothing. No forms exist
2	Self-review	Watches who is outstanding, nudges	—	Fills in their own form and sends it
3	Manager review	—	Writes their review of each person. Records competency levels	Nothing. Self-reviews already sent are kept
4	Calibration	Compares marks, moves any out of line with a reason, nine-box	Makes each rating final — this tells the person	—
5	Published	Reads the report and the trend	—	Reads it. Acknowledges, or formally disputes

The four presses that move it along — Start the period, Move to manager review, Move to calibration, Publish the results — are all one-way. Nothing takes a period backwards.

PHASE A • ONCE PER COMPANY

Decide what a mark means before you measure anybody

Three settings. You do this once and then leave it alone — a change here never moves a period that has already started, which is deliberate.

Departments and teams

Group people into departments, and see what each one costs a month.

Salary grades

Put people on a band, then raise a whole band at once.

Shifts and nights

Rotas, night duty and weekend cover instead of one working pattern.

Staff loans and advances

Track repayments straight out of payroll.

Expense claims

Staff claim money back, you approve it and pay it.

Appraisals

Scored reviews inside an appraisal period, on top of shared goals.

Hiring

Post a role, track candidates through a pipeline, send an offer.

Attendance

A clock-in button, today's roster, and a calendar of who came in.

What an employee record asks for

3 of 3 on. These change the add-an-employee form, not the menu.

Turning one off does not change anybody's pay

A person who already has a TIN keeps it, payroll keeps filing with it, and their record still shows it. What stops is being asked for it on new records, and the payroll run still holds back anybody it cannot pay, for the same reasons as before.

Tax details

Ask for a PAYE state, a TIN and declared rent. Off means payslips show no PAYE.

Pension and NHF

Ask for an RSA PIN, a pension provider and an NHF number. Off means no pension is deducted or remitted.

Bank accounts

Ask for a bank and an account number. Off means you pay people some other way.

For companies that need more detail

Depth inside something you already have on. Leave these off unless you recognise the situation.

More than one appraiser per person

For people judged by a project lead or another department's manager as well as their own. Each appraiser gets a share of the mark.

Ask for a code from email

People who have set it up are asked for a six-digit code when they sign in. You choose separately which actions also need one.

Name the levels on the scale

WHERE	Settings → Appraisal scoring → What a mark is called /settings/performance
WHO	HR / Owner
CLICK	Edit What level 3 is called and What it means for each of the five, then save.
YOU'LL SEE	The badge flips from The built-in five to Your company's words .

Careful. Two levels cannot share a word — the product refuses it, because a reader could not tell them apart. And a period that has already started keeps the words it started with.

Set the targets, and get them agreed

This is the half of the module people skip, and skipping it is what produces an appraisal nobody can defend. An objective that was never agreed is never scored — it will simply be absent from the mark, silently.

Easy to miss. Scored in is what files the objective against a period. Leave it as Not part of an appraisal period and the objective is a perfectly good tracker that counts towards nobody's mark. It will not warn you.

WHO	Line manager · HR / Owner
CLICK	Give a KPI to people , tick the names, confirm.
YOU'LL SEE	The button counts what it will do — Assign to 4 people .

No screenshot, and why. No screenshot. This control appears only on a company or department objective — one with others laddering up to it — and in this company every objective happens to belong to one person.

11 Send it to be agreed

WHERE	Performance → KPIs → click the objective to open it <code>/performance/kpis</code>
WHO	The owner
CLICK	Send to be agreed , then Send it on the confirmation.
YOU'LL SEE	The card's agreement badge moves from Draft to Waiting to be agreed .

Worth knowing. Your own Overview then lists it under Waiting on somebody else, and it appears in your manager's Waiting on you at the same moment. Showing both sides of that is the most convincing thing in a demo.

Send "Complete the Postgres 18 upgrade" to be agreed?

It goes to whoever agrees Emeka Anyanwu's objectives — their manager, or somebody who can edit records. Nobody agrees their own.

Once it is agreed the target is fixed: the title, the period and every measure's target stop moving, and no new measure can be added. Progress still moves. Changing what was asked for after that takes a recorded revision.

It is not in an appraisal period, so agreeing it counts towards nobody's mark — and the period is one of the fields that freezes, so it cannot be added afterwards.

12 Agree it — as the other person

WHERE	Performance → Objectives to agree /performance/approvals
WHO	Line manager · HR / Owner
CLICK	Agree it on the row, then confirm. The other two answers are Send it back (needs a reason, they can resend) and Refuse it (final, cannot be resent).
YOU'LL SEE	The row leaves the queue and the objective's badge becomes Agreed everywhere.

Careful. Nobody agrees their own, whatever permissions they hold. And agreed means frozen: the second screenshot is an agreed objective, and it offers Reopen the target — there is no Add a measure and no Send to be agreed, because the target cannot change. Reopening demands a reason and records who did it and when.

YOU'LL SEE	A message counting exactly what happened — “12 forms written · 12 told in the app” .

One-way — cannot be undone. Starting returns two lists by name, and they are the only time anybody is told: nobody is appraising them (these people finish with no mark at all) and nothing agreed to be judged on. Note the primary button reads Add a question first and is dead until the period has one. Nothing here sends email — people are told inside the app only.

Who should give feedback on Adaeze Okonkwo?

Each one gets their own form about Adaeze Okonkwo. Their answers count towards the mark only if they are an appraiser with a share of it; otherwise they are read as feedback beside it.

Compare across the company, then make the marks final

Calibration is where a company looks at every mark side by side and asks whether two managers have been using the same scale. It is also where a rating stops being a draft and becomes the thing a person is told.

Move it to calibration

WHERE	Performance → Appraisal periods → open the period <code>/performance/periods/{id}</code>
WHO	HR / Owner
CLICK	Move to calibration.
YOU'LL SEE	"Marks are in. Nothing else is asked for until you publish." A Calibration column appears on the register.

No screenshot, and why. No screenshot. Moving a stage is one-way and the demo company's only period is at self-review; advancing it to photograph the button would have changed real data that cannot be put back. This unlocks finalising — ratings only appear in a manager's Waiting on you once the period is at calibration.

Move a mark that is out of line

WHERE	Performance → Appraisal periods → open the period <code>/performance/periods/{id}</code>
WHO	HR / Owner
CLICK	Move the mark on the row → new percentage → Why .
YOU'LL SEE	The row shows both figures: what the answers produced, and what it was moved to.

No screenshot, and why. The screenshot is the register as it stands at self-review. The Calibration column and its Move the mark control appear only once the period reaches calibration, for the reason in step 21. The reason is not optional and not a formality: it is kept with the mark and is what explains the change years later.

Worth knowing. Anybody missing either half is named underneath the grid with which half is missing, rather than being dropped into the bottom-left box. As the screen puts it: an absence is not the bottom of a scale.

In summary

The gap is communication, not delivery. Chidi does the work and then it sits undescribed — the latency result went into a PR title and nowhere else, so Platform found out about it a fortnight late. Next half I want him writing the short note that goes with the change, not because it is ceremony but because his work is currently invisible to everybody who is not reading the diff.

Sign-off, and the two ways it can go

A final rating is not finished until the person it is about has answered it.
Leaving it unanswered is deliberately not one of the options.

25 Acknowledge, or formally dispute

WHERE	Performance → Overview → open the rating <code>/performance/reviews/{id}</code>
WHO	The person
CLICK	I have seen this or I do not accept it.
YOU'LL SEE	A banner reading "This rating is final. It needs your answer." above both buttons.

Careful. One answer only, and the dialog says so before you press: you can do this once, and it cannot be swapped for the other afterwards. Acknowledging is not agreeing — the screen says so in as many words. Three states exist and the product never confuses them: acknowledged, disputed, and nobody has asked them yet.

Say you do not accept this

Your rating for H2 2026 Appraisal stays as it is. The dispute goes on the record beside it.

The mark does not change. Whoever finalised it and whoever wrote it are both told, and somebody has to answer what you say here: that is what makes it a dispute rather than an argument.

You can do this once, and it cannot be swapped for an acknowledgement afterwards.

How appraisals work

An appraisal period is a stretch of time

A half, a quarter, a probation. Starting one gives every employee a form and tells them it is open. Everything below happens inside it, and a person's mark belongs to one period rather than to the year.

Objectives are what people aim at

A target with a number on it, filed against the period. It has to be agreed before the period it covers, on the objectives queue, and only agreed ones are ever scored. A target agreed after the result is known is not a target.

Competencies are how they work

Judgement, communication, leading a team. They come ready-made in four groups — you can rename them or switch them off — and somebody records a level against each one, once per person per period. Leadership is only rated for people who actually manage somebody; for everybody else it is left out rather than marked low.

The mark is the two of them, weighted

Each part carries a share of the mark, and the shares add up to 100% exactly — there is no state where they do not, so there is nothing to reconcile afterwards.

45%

Delivery against objectives

25%

Core competencies

15%

Behavioural competencies

15%

Leadership

Your company set these. Change what each part is worth

Self-assessment is weighted at 0%. It is collected and shown beside the manager's rating, and it does not change the score.

The shares are frozen when the period opens

They are copied onto the period the moment it starts. Changing them next quarter cannot move a mark already given, which is what makes a mark from two years ago still explainable.

Nothing recorded is not a nought

A part with nothing behind it — no agreed objective, nobody rated the competencies, not a manager — is left out of the mark, and the remaining parts carry the difference. The screens say which part was left out and for how many people. "Scored nought" and "nothing was recorded" are different things to say about a person.

Then somebody is told, and answers

The appraiser makes the mark final, the employee reads it, and either acknowledges it or formally disagrees. Both are recorded with a date. Acknowledging is not agreeing, and the screen says so where somebody is about to do it.

What an appraisal is made of

The four groups of competencies, ready on day one. Rename or switch any of them off in settings.

/performance/how-it-works

What is not photographed here, and why

Calibration, and moving a mark (steps 21 and 22). The demo company's only appraisal period is at self-review. Moving a period's stage is one-way in the product, so photographing those two screens would have meant moving this company's real records into a state they cannot be put back from. The register is shown as it stands instead, and the two steps say what changes.

Giving one objective to several people (step 10). That control appears only on a company or department objective — one with others laddering up to it — and in this company every objective happens to belong to one person.

Everything else is a real screen. Nothing in this document is a mock-up or a drawing. Each image is the live product as it ran on 11 September 2026, signed in as the role named in the step — an administrator, a line manager, or an ordinary employee reading their own final rating.

Where a step needed a draft period to photograph, one was created, captured and deleted again. Everything was put back exactly as it was found.
